Defining Ethics

It deals with human character and conduct based on established standards with an aim to achieve the chief good or Summum Bonum.

It can also be defined as -

- (1) It is a field of moral philosophy which deals with rightness and wrongness of human conduct.
- (2) Ethics deals with human character and conduct based on a set of principles or values.

(3) It is afield of normative science which not only establishes standards of conduct but also deals with improving human conduct.

Therefore, the term ethics has a broad connotation although in simple terms it is defined as human character and conduct based on established standards.

The term ethics has been derived from the greek word 'ethicos' which means habit/character/conduct.

When good habits are inherited human develops right conduct. That's why ethics is about rightness and wrongness of human conduct.

How one knows whether a conduct is right or wrong?

When one is ethical

Since ethics is based on established standards provided by normative theory, it aims at improving the conduct of human so that there is achievement of the chief good. Anything cannot be considered as ethical standards, although individuals, people, society can have their own standards of conduct but that may not be considered necessarily as ethical standard.

Ethical standards are based on rationality and critical thinking. Hence, ethical standards are also objective standards of human conduct, known as universal standards of human conduct.

- Ethics is about regulation of conduct based on established standards.

It means ethics can also be defined as human conduct and character based on universal standards.

It means ethics has its own standards based on normative science or field of moral philosophy.

Why ethics is important?

Since ethics is about individual character and conduct, ethics brings improvement in human character and conduct and helps in making human good human.

Society is nothing but summation of individuals and if individuals have good character and conduct society in summation will have people with good character and conduct.

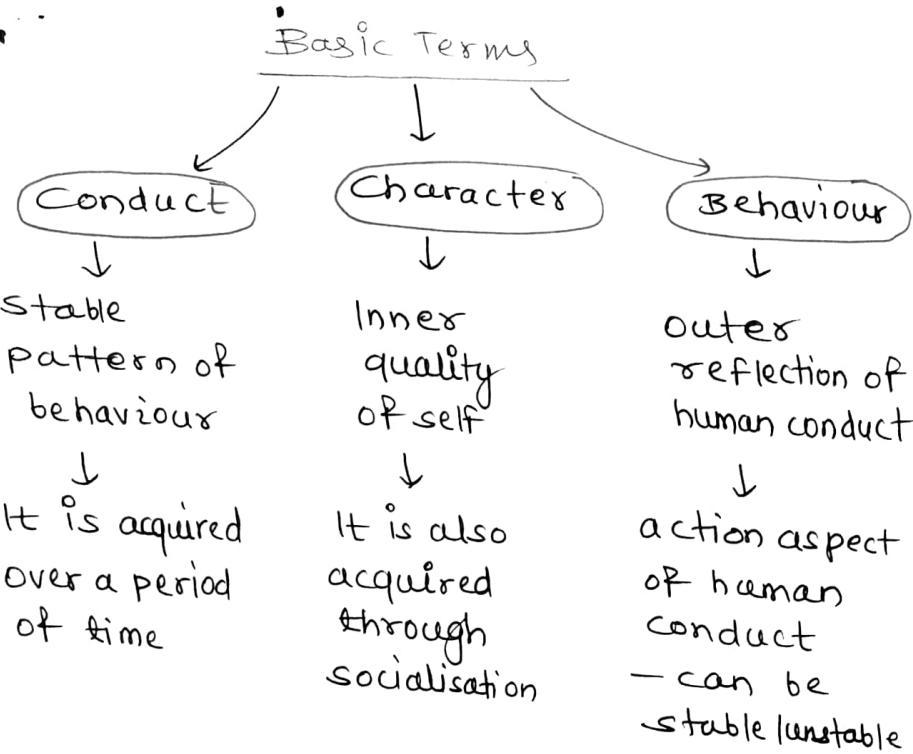

Good character and conduct are the basis of solution of most of the problems of the society. Human behaviour is root cause of most of the problems of the society and hence ethics can provide the most important weapon for solving the problems of the society.

It is character of people which is most distinguishing factor between the countries irrespective of whether they are developed or developing.

In essence it can be said that ethics can help in establishing peace, harmony, stability and society with high level of

That's why Vivekananda remarked "Society is not strong because it has atomic weapon rather it has people with good character."

Strength of society is the product of its people with good character.

Relations between

Relationship between Morality and Ethics

- Both deals with rightness and wrongness of human conduct. The literal meaning of both is same.
→ habit / character / conduct

The term moral deals with rightness or a quality of behaviour which has connotation of "rightness" of behaviour.

- Morality is based on individual standards / values / principles of behaviour / moral code of behaviour
- Morality is about rightness or wrongness of human conduct based on individual standards of behaviour.

Individual

depends on person he/she considers right or wrong

→ This may or may not be established standards.

- should conform to some inherent quality.

Even if morality and ethics have the same literal meaning and they have connotation of rightness in behaviour, still they have following differences:

Morality

- based on individual standards
- Relativism in moral standards
- It is a qualitative term about human behaviour
- An individual has to conform to one's own standards for moral conduct.

Ethics

- based on established standards / universal standards
- Absolutism in ethical standards
- It is a field of normative science / moral science. It deals with moral conduct.
- An individual has to conform to ethical standards.

Even if they have differences, there is a complex b/w morality and ethics. There can be three different kinds of relationships -

- (1) Moral as well as ethical
- (2) Moral but not ethical
- (3) Ethical but not moral

Moral as well as ethical

- Selflessness as both moral and ethical standard.

Moral but not ethical

- Mr. A → war can be moral
- Mrs. B → Promotion of caste interest
- Being against

→ Live-in → Pre-marital sex
